Well, you probably wear your shoes too much or you were walking barefoot in a public swimming pool or are being negligent in using communal comfort rooms. Maybe you haven't heard of nail fungi and didn't care until you found them occupying 10 per cent of your feet. It nailed it. Now read this for your awareness. Nail fungi, onychomycosis or tinea unguium in scientific terms, commonly infects the feet because these minuscule fiends love dark and humid spots of the human body.

Since our feet spend most of their waking time enfolded in leathers or rubbers and inefficient socks, the fungi often breed in the toenails where there is enough oxygen and moisture. Beware. This kind of fungus is naturally anaerobic. It means that they indulge in environment with less supply of oxygen. It belongs to the dermatophytes which also causes athlete's foot, ringworm, psoriasis, and jock itch among others.

Some of the sources of these fungi are yeasts and molds. They thrive in soggy areas and can penetrate our nails through contact with an infected nail or improper hygiene.
