Adverse effects include bloody stools, confusion, diarrhea, dizziness, flushed skin, headache, increased urination, loss of appetite, muscle twitching, nausea, trembling, trouble sleeping, vomiting of blood, heartburn, etc. The asthma drug pirbuterol can cause or worsen high blood pressure, diabetes or heart disease. Inhaled drugs, such as salbutamol and terbutaline, have been found to cause tremors, jitters, nervousness, and in extreme cases, begin tumors in the ligaments and heart disease.

While used to treat diverse bacterial infections, antibiotics are also prescribed to address the common cold. Unfortunately, antibiotics are often prescribed unnecessarily, bringing harmful side effects instead of cure. In fact, about fifty-one percent of the more than three million people who saw doctors for treatment of the common cold were unnecessarily given a prescription of antibiotics.

Since the cold and flu are caused by viruses, they cannot be cured by antibiotics. Antibiotics, when used incorrectly, can seriously damage the body's immune system. Side effects of antibiotics include allergic reactions, diarrhea, skin rash, abnormal bleeding, joint and muscle pain, nausea or vomiting and bleeding. In extreme cases, a simple cold may even develop into pneumonia because the body becomes less resistant to a bacterial super infection.

When given an antibiotic, the body can also develop a bacterial resistance to the antibiotic, making them useless in future instances when they could have proven effective. After many congressional hearings regarding these harmful side effects, it has become the general consensus that forty to sixty percent of all antibiotics are misprescribed. As evidenced, the harmful side effects far outweigh the benefits of medically treating cold-related symptoms.

Despite this unsettling fact, cold, cough, allergy and asthma sufferers can still find relief. In many cases, common sense can prevent the common cold and its symptoms from ever attacking. People who don't smoke, for instance, are less likely to catch a cold because smoke paralyzes the hair-like cells that clean buy asendin online in Australia the body's airways.

Frequently washing one's hands is another effective way to prevent colds. Proper diet in accordance with nutritional immunology, adequate amounts of liquid, and ample rest are also effective methods used to both prevent and treat cold symptoms. By taking preventative measures, even those most prone to attack can outwit and overcome the cold war offenders.
